Title: You don't need to predict the future when you know how to create it

What will the world be like twenty or fifty years from now? How will technology, climate change, or an aging population impact our lives and work? It's tempting to speculate. What we often fail to appreciate, however, is that as the world becomes increasingly complex and interconnected, the harder it becomes to plan for success based on what's worked in the past. Fortunately, this challenge also affords us an amazing opportunity: rather than trying to predict the future, we can try to create it. In this talk, keynote speaker Jen Gresham will introduce us to the concept of moonshots and show us how to build a thriving career and business under the assumption that the future is unknown.
